The silent vote spoke and chose Fred W. Keller mayor of South Bend by a plurality of 697.

Carrying into office with him the citizens' candidates for city judge, the three councilmen-at-large and three out of seven of the ward councilmen, the citizens' party was swept triumphantly into office Tuesday at the end of the hardest fought campaign in the history of South Bend.

The silent vote spoke—and if it spoke generally over the city, it fairly shouted in the seventh ward.

The big south end ward rallied to the citizens' ticket and played it clear across the board.

Had the seventh been a part of Mishawaka or Nappanee, Joyce would have been elected. But the seventh turned a clean 983 plurality for Keller.

The first and fifth also turned Keller pluralities but by smaller figures than was expected.

In the meantime the second and sixth and the third and fourth, long democratic strongholds, failed to show up as strongly as was anticipated and their pluralities were unable to overcome Keller's lead.

Great crowds on the downtown streets showed their interest in the election and enthusiasm was rampant for two hours after the result was known.

The democrats saved the clerkship and four seats in council out of the wreckage. Harvey Rostiser, democratic candidate for clerk, went over to victory with a plurality of 1864. The citizens downtown generally "cut" Alex Langel, and Rostiser's victory was never in question.

Jere Hagerty, democrat, in the third, and M. A. Buechner, citizens, in the first, were the only members of the present council to be re-elected.

McCullough, Paide and Whiteman, democratic candidates for councilmen-at-large, ran ahead of the ticket, and Lang, Wolter and Hagey were elected by average pluralities of 200.

Herbert Warner defeated P. J. Houlihan by 460.

The total vote, despite appearances early in the day, ran some 1,800 short of the registration, as the total figure was but 10,700 out of 12,500 on the registry books. As more than half the vote was polled by noon the leaders had expected a larger total vote.

The result was not a surprise to the citizens, who had been wonderfully confident during the last few days and on Tuesday morning were claiming the election by a plurality of 1,000.

The democrats were equally confident and had all the best of it in the betting, the odds being 10 to 7 in Joyce's favor. Not much money changed hands, however.

Great interest was shown in the election here by people in neighboring cities and all evening the long-distance telephone lines into the News-Times office were buzzing with the queries of people over the state as to the results here.

With the independent or citizens' tickets in the field in most of the cities over the state, many inquiries came in as to the results there.

Democrats gained some satisfaction over the fact that South Bend was the only big city lost to them, Indianapolis, Terre Haute, Fort Wayne, Evansville, Logansport and Muncie all going democratic.

The republicans ran somewhat better than expected, while the progressives, who ran second a year ago, were fifth this year, running behind the socialists, the approximate vote being: Loughman, republican, 650; Kahn, socialist, 400, and Landon, progressive, 135.

For an election in which so much interest was aroused and so many bitter debates started, the election was remarkable for its good order and harmony. All sides were well represented by challengers, watchers and poll-book holders, who scrutinized each voter carefully, but there was little friction.

As the mid-afternoon was reached the poll-book men began checking up the missing voters and sending word to them by telephone or by messenger that it was time to vote. The fact that a number of the largest factories closed down for all day or half the day was expected to swell the total vote to record proportions.

The election wrought great changes in the city council. The political complexion of that body was changed.

John K. Smogor, democrat, of the sixth ward, makes the fourth member of the minority. Smogor is vice president and general manager of A. Smogor & Sons, and lives at 456 S. Walnut st.

William Goebel, 508 Wenger st., was elected to represent the seventh ward as a candidate on the citizens' ticket. Goebel is a clerk at Wilson Brothers Co.

Republicans Third.
 Of the three minor parties in the race whose candidates scarcely entertained hope of winning but who were bent on obtaining as large a vote as possible as a vindication of principle the republican party polled the largest number of votes with the socialists second. The progressives came third with less than 200. Loughman on the republican ticket polled more than 600 and Kahn on the socialist ticket received slightly over 400.

The socialist stronghold proved to be the seventh ward where more than 100 votes were given to Kahn. The fourth ward was a close second for the socialists, bringing in 99 votes, more than the total combined vote of the republicans and progressives in that ward. Loughman received 60 in the fourth ward while Landon got 15.

In the seventh ward Loughman ran strong his vote nearing the hundred mark. Landon received one-fourth this number.

In the first ward the progressives polled one less than the socialists, 32, while Loughman again neared the hundred mark in this ward. In the second the republican candidate received more than 150, running far ahead of the other two. The socialists polled about 60 while the progressives 25. The progressives and socialists ran a neck and neck race in the fifth ward each nearing 30. Loughman received 73 votes. In the sixth the republican candidate received 80 while the socialists polled 31 and the progressives 17.

Keller carried his own ward, the first, by 484 votes, and his own precinct, the third of the first, by 92. The vote for the ward stood 1,231 for Keller and 747 for Joyce.

Joyce carried his own ward, the fourth, by 202 plurality, and his own
